

THE NEW PLAY

"Ruled Off the Turf" Springs Another Thrilling Political Surprise.

THINGS have changed in the whirling world of popular-priced motion drama. The good old buzzard has gone to rust, the wheezy locomotive has been backed into the store-banks and the real fire-engine is cold and forgotten. In their place comes a new sensation—the high-gearred, bullet-bearing politician. In "The Power of Money" at the American Theatre, Roosevelt who looked like a German comedian and a Harriet who looked like the corner of Forty-second street and Broadway furnished the choice thrills. "Ruled off the Turf," at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, takes another figure from political life, and has him stand between injustice and the "peepul."

"Slippery Dick" Waldo, a race-track crook, intent upon ruining an honest jockey, Jack King, charges the boy with having stolen his watch and turns him over to a policeman. The cop is about to drag the innocent little chap to jail when a man with an air of importance and a cigarette steps briskly on the scene and asks:

"What's this, officer?"

Waldo, and telling her that he is a son of her father. He adds that his wife will look after her. "Your wife!" sneers the little jockey, fanning the pair in the office of the "Power of Money" that same two hours, but I'll be if you're one of them." But Lucy permits herself to do personal favors for the "Power of Money."

Waldo, and his wife finally get her where they want her—into the room where the jockey and then send for the train which contains the "paper." But when they open the trunk up jumps Jack King—the boy with a revolver in each hand. This time I win!"

Life in that hotel was very lively, and to make the time pass pleasantly two men, a police officer and a jockey, dance in the hall, just outside the Waldo room. The jockey, with the full strength of the working force to back him on the side, called to the captain of the police force, a young Girl Like You" in the office.

Chubby, cherubic George Mack was a nice, cheerful jockey until "Slippery Dick" Waldo, who had been getting a crooked jockey to make false claims against him. Then he lost heart and said, "Now, mother will have to go back to work."

The villain tracked him everywhere in his desperate attempts to secure the "papers" and there was gun-play warfare, but strenuous enough no policeman could get away with it.

Union Square. It was not until the last act that the jockey came under the wire with flying colors.
